MATRIX OF PROGRAMMES OF THE DEVELOPMENT AGENCIES OPERATING IN THE REGION

1. INTRODUCTION

1.01 Contributors agreed with the Bank's intention to target the three operational themes, with poverty reduction as an overarching theme¹, through four strategic objectives and a limited number of core priorities or sectors, in which the Bank has strong experience and would be expected to be a leading provider of assistance.

1.02 The four strategic and core priorities are:

- Broad-Based Economic Growth and Inclusive Social Development, with a focus on Education and Training, Agriculture and Rural Development, Social and Economic Infrastructure and Private Sector Development.
- Environmental Sustainability and Disaster Management, focusing on Water and Sanitation, Renewable Energy, Disaster Risk Reduction and Climate Change Mitigation and Adaptation.
- Regional Cooperation and Integration (RCI), in particular the provision of Regional Public Goods.
- Good Governance with an emphasis on Economic Management, Capacity Development and Legislative and Regulatory Frameworks.

1.03 Contributors encouraged the Bank to renew its role in aid coordination and collaboration as an instrument of alignment and harmonisation and reducing the transaction costs in the development assistance relationship. They considered that the Bank, with the essential support of SDF, has a special role to play in overcoming some of the complexities in the aid architecture for the Caribbean, and the transaction costs of a large number of aid channels and the fragmentation of donor-funded activities.

1.04 To facilitate that process of alignment and harmonisation, the Bank has prepared – Annex 1 - aCoordination Matrix of Development Partners Programmes of Development Cooperation. This initial attempt at preparing a coordination matrix points to gaps in the Development Partners' Programmes, areas that are under-served, and areas in which there should be good prospects for collaboration and joint operations with the Caribbean Development Bank (CDB) and among the other Development Partners (DPs).

^{1/} Strengthening poverty reduction and human development; supporting environmental sustainability and advancing the climate change agenda; and supporting RCI.

2. RESULTS OF THE MATRIX OF PROGRAMMES IN SUPPORT OF THE SDF 7 STRATEGIC THEMES OF DEVELOPMENT AGENCIES OPERATING IN THE REGION

A. Preliminary Observations

2.01 The attempt to construct a coordination matrix of DPs, Development Cooperation Programmes (DCPs) is, to some extent, handicapped by several features of these programmes.

2.02 DCPs are not uniform in their presentation. Some are more detailed in their programme/project descriptions than others. Some identify beneficiary countries while some do not. Similar projects may fall under different broad themes in different DPs programmes. There is also a lack of consistency in DPs planning periods, starting and ending at different dates. Some DPs programmes also do not seem up-to-date in terms of ongoing, completed and planned activities.

2.03 China has been included in the matrix but it should be noted that the entries do not necessarily represent current Caribbean-specific programme activities. They have been taken from China's recently published (November 5, 2008) "Policy Paper on Latin America and the Caribbean."

2.04 The present effort should therefore be considered as an initial attempt at preparing a matrix coordination of the DPs programmes. It indicates the need for a progressively more uniform, detailed and comprehensive presentation of programme information. This will require, to begin with, the use by DPs of a more consistent format for organising their DCPs. This would be a useful initial task for the proposed new CDB-based Focal Point (FP) for Coordination to undertake.

B. Some Conclusions on Development Partners' Cooperation Programmes

2.05 Nevertheless, the information assembled points to several useful conclusions. They include the following:

- DPs tend to cluster around a predictable small number of broad project themes, namely, education, social development, HIV/AIDS, financial managements (budgetary, debt management), and public sector management and modernisation (mostly of the financial and justice agencies). The latter two are the densest areas of the DPs concentration.
- However, while DPs may be operating under the same broad themes, they do not necessarily duplicate operations, as they often focus on different countries or different aspects of the problem.
- There seems to be an absence, nevertheless, of collaboration with a view to exploiting synergies and constructing integrated activity frameworks. It is thus difficult to determine whether the activities undertaken are comprehensive and integrated enough and of sufficient scale and depth to make for a significant, sustainable difference to the Region's performance. The question posed is: are the activities too fragmented, spread too thinly, and also among too few countries? This too would be a useful task for the new FP to examine in collaboration with DPs.
- DPs seem to be increasingly inclined to outsource their development cooperation activities to existing, specialist, international or regional organisations. Certain of them have essentially become funding sources for the activities for those organisations. While there are clear advantages in this approach, it becomes more difficult to tract the results of DPs interventions. Examples of this occur when, as in the case of support for environmental problems, international and trade policy and negotiations, and HIV/AIDS, funds of multiple DPs are combined in the budgets of executing international and regional organisations. This thus raises the issue of the relative effectiveness of an institution-driven versus an activity-driven orientation. This is another issue that the FP may find useful to examine.

• Within areas of concentration, questions arise about the coherence of the DPs programmes taken as a whole. For example, in the area of Governance, there is a wide mix of activities, ranging from fiscal policy to democracy and corruption, and from property rights to the legislature, the elections process, and trafficking in persons. Is such a mix inevitable, and does it impact negatively on the development effectiveness of DPs investment of resources in development cooperation? Should not beneficiary countries themselves give greater emphasis to the preparation of more comprehensive, coherent, phased and prioritised road maps to the problems that have to be tackled?

C. Development Cooperation Areas Inadequately Addressed

The most outstanding gap in DPs DCPs is Regional/Transnational Public Goods (RPGs). DPs 2.06 seem to define RCI projects in different ways. Thus some partners may view an activity such as support to fiscal policy or public sector modernisation that is replicated across several countries as a regional cooperation project. RPGs, however, focus specifically on activities that generate benefits (externalities) that are shared among multiple countries of the regional community, and that are unlikely to materialise by autonomous action on the part of any individual member of the group. The RPGs projects that find favour among one or two DPs are support to international trade policy and negotiations [Caribbean CDF, the Regional Negotiating Machinery (CRNM)], to the Caribbean Community (CARICOM)/CARICOM Single Market and Economy (CSME) and the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS)secretariats, and to HIV/AIDS programmes.

2.07 Within the fields of RPGs, the following outstanding gaps have been identified:

- Economic policy harmonisation and legal frameworks for business in a single economy;
- Climate change mitigation and adaptation;
- Food security;
- Maritime transport;
- Energy efficiency conservation and renewable sources; and
- Common health services

2.08 Other under-served areas include:

- Early childhood education;
- Student loans;
- Disaster risk management;
- Rural infrastructure;
- Competitiveness of firms;
- Water infrastructure;
- Urban transport systems; and
- Urban revitalisation.

D. Possible Areas for Collaboration and Joint Operations

2.09 The areas most in need of collaboration are:

- Good Governance;
- Public sector management and modernisation;
- Private sector development; and
- Legislative and regulatory frameworks.

2.10 All four of these areas engage the interest of most DPs, and are marked by a mix of activities that seem somewhat patchy, sometimes overlapping, and apparently haphazardly distributed among beneficiary countries. Collaboration could offer the possibility of focusing more sharply on top, bottleneck-breaking priorities, and on countries where efforts should be consistently concentrated. It should make possible the pooling of the DPs efforts and financial resources so as to maximise the benefits of synergies and complementarities, of shared experiences, including with project design, preparation and evaluation, and of cost reduction through the scale of operation and specialisation.

2.11 Many of the areas identified above as under-served also offer good prospects for collaboration and joint operations, especially the larger, more complex, and more costly areas, such as:

- Maritime transport;
- Climate change;
- Energy efficiency conservation and renewable sources;
- Common health services;
- Water infrastructure;
- Urban revitalisation; and
- Rural infrastructure.
